PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

Petitioner, William Rey, respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment, opinion, and order on rehearing of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, entered in Case No. 86-5093 on March 9, 1987, and April 29, 1987, which affirmed the judgment of conviction and sentence of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit affirming the petitioner's judgment of conviction and sentence is reported in United States v. Rey, 811 F.2d 1453 (11th Cir. 1987), rehearing denied, ___ F.2d ___ (11th Cir. 1987). The decision is reproduced in the Appendix, hereinafter "A.____." A timely Petition for Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc was filed and denied by order of the Eleventh Circuit entered April 29, 1987. See A.43-45.

JURISDICTION

Jurisdiction is invoked under 28 U.S.C. §1254(1). This petition is filed within the authorized time period following the Eleventh Circuit's order on rehearing. See Supreme Court Rule 20.1.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

United States Constitution, Fifth Amendment:

No person shall be... deprived of life, liberty, or of law... .

United States Constitution, Sixth
Amendment:

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a...trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed... .

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The petitioner, WILLIAM REY, was the appellant in the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, and the defendant in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida. The respondent, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, was the appellee in the Eleventh Circuit, and the prosecution in the district court. In this petition, petitioner will be referred to as the defendant or by name, and the respondent will be referred to as the government. All emphasis is added unless otherwise indicated.

On September 5, 1984, a grand jury in the Southern District of Florida returned a three-count indictment charging the defendant, along with three named co-defendants,¹ with (I) conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute cocaine in violation of 21 U.S.C. §§841(a)(1), 846; (II) possession with intent to distribute cocaine in violation of 21 U.S.C. §841(a)(1) and 18 U.S.C. §2; and (III) use of a wire communication facility in facilitating the commission of the conspiracy in violation of 21 U.S.C. §§843(b) and 846. (R1:1-3).²

² The record references in this petition are to the record on appeal which was before the Eleventh Circuit and which has been returned to the clerk of the United States District

Trial by jury was held before the Honorable Alcee L. Hastings, district judge, from November 20, 1985, through November 26, 1985, resulting in a verdict of guilty as charged on all counts. (R1:102). After denying the defendant's timely post-trial motions, the district court, on January 21, 1986, entered its judgment and sentence as follows: as to Counts I and II, charging conspiracy and the substantive offense of possession with intent to distribute cocaine, the defendant was sentenced to six years imprisonment on each count, concurrently with each other; as to Count III, charging use of the telephone to facilitate the conspiracy, the defendant was sentenced to four years imprisonment, to run concurrently with Count I. It was further ordered that the defendant serve a special parole term of three years as to Count II. (R2:116).

While the events charged in the indictment in the case at bar commenced on August 24, 1984, agents of the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) commenced working with an informant, one Joseph Badalich, on or about May 4, 1984, almost four month's earlier, when Badalich was arrested arising out of a totally unrelated drug investigation. (R4:17). In an effort to "get a walk" for his cooperation in making future cases against other persons, Badalich began negotiating with defendant Rey in a cocaine transaction in June of 1984. (R4:15; R6:100; R9:18, 19; R11:55; R12:149). During the ensuing three months period, Badalich initiated numerous unrecorded and unmonitored meetings and telephone conversations with the defendant. (R11:36-7; R12:153). It was not until August 24, 1984, that Badalich began recording the telephone conversations he placed to the defendant. (R12:152). Undercover DEA agent Robert McCracken acted as the buyer of large quantities of cocaine in partners with informant Badalich. (R11:20, 26).

According to Agent McCracken, Badalich told him that defendant Rey was a person "who owned a boat and who was engaged in being associated with smugglers of cocaine." (R4:23; R9:19).

Agent McCracken testified at a pretrial hearing on the defendant's motion to dismiss predicated upon use of contingently motivated informants that he needs to know as much as possible about a person he is investigating to see if that person "is worthy of my time." (R7:137-8; R11:45). For this reason, McCracken checked the defendant's name in the NADIS computer which indicated that "a William Rey" was involved in drug trafficking. (R4:23-4; R7:134-5; R11:44). Despite the fact that the computer also listed a case and file number along with the name "William Rey," Agent McCracken did not consult the source of the computer's "little squib," nor did he obtain a print-out of further information which was admittedly readily available from the computer. (R7:138; R11:44-48). McCracken felt that the computer's initial information was sufficient for him to commence an investigation of the defendant based on the information received from the computer and on what informant Badalich had told him. (R7:136). Thus, McCracken conducted no independent verification of the defendant's purported drug involvement. (R11:49). Agent McCracken later learned, however, and so testified before the jury during the trial, that the NADIS information "had absolutely nothing to do with this man [defendant] that sits in this court today." (R11:45-6). Agent McCracken did not check further as he could have and only later discovered that the "William Rey" mentioned in the computer was, in point of fact, not the defendant William Rey in the case at bar. (R11:48). McCracken later learned that defendant Rey had no prior arrests or convictions. (R11:49). Other than what informant Badalich told Agent McCracken about the defendant, the DEA had no independent verification that the defendant had ever been involved in narcotics transactions. Id.

On August 24, 1984, informant Badalich introduced Agent McCracken to the defendant at a Days Inn Motel in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. (R11:22). The substance of the conversation at the motel was that the defendant had sources of supply in Miami for some ten kilograms of cocaine. (R11:23). The defendant would have to go to Miami to confer with his source before he could know whether they could accomplish the transaction that day. Id. Agent McCracken gave the defendant an undercover telephone number to call in order to advise McCracken of the status of the negotiations with defendant's source. (R11:24). After this meeting, the parties went out to the parking lot where the defendant was shown a briefcase containing $400,000 in cash. Id.

The agent left and the defendant subsequently called him at the telephone number provided; this call was not recorded. (R11:25, 37). The defendant advised that it looked good but that they could not do it before 2:00 p.m. They decided to put it off until the following Monday, August 27, 1984. (R11:25-6).

On that day, August 27, McCracken and informant Badalich telephoned the defendant from the Fort Lauderdale DEA office; this call was recorded on government Exhibit 3E. (R11:26). During this call, Badalich informed the defendant that they had to get the deal done by 2:00 p.m.; the defendant replied to Badalich over the telephone, "We have to talk." (R11:37).³ Agent

³ The tape recording of this conversation, government Exhibit 3E, was admitted into evidence and played before the jury. Unfortunately, a cold record cannot reflect either the fervor in the defendant's voice when he told Badalich "We have to talk" or the anger in McCracken's voice when he demanded to know whether the defendant would come through with the cocaine. The jury heard the tape and should this Court desire to hear it, it can be immediately transmitted on order of this Court.

McCracken then got on the telephone and demanded to know whether the defendant was going to produce the cocaine or not; the defendant told Agent McCracken that McCracken and Badalich should come to the defendant's house and advised McCracken not to bring the money with him. (R11:38). This is "not frequently" what happens in drug deals. Id. After this conversation, McCracken and Badalich went to the defendant's house in Miami Beach. (R11:30).

The defendant said he did not have the cocaine with him and they would have to go to see his source, "Francisco," (co-defendant Francisco Ramos), at a perfume factory nearby. (R11:31). In addition, the defendant informed McCracken that the deal was lowered from ten to eight kilograms.

Id.

After this conversation, the defendant and Badalich drove to Sassy Cosmetics with Agents McCracken and Price following. (R11:32). McCracken went inside while Agent Price remained in the car. Id.

Inside the warehouse, the defendant introduced McCracken to "Francisco" and also to the other co-defendants, Angel Ortiz and Luiz Mora. (R11:33). Ramos then told Agent McCracken that he had not eight, but only two kilograms of cocaine to show him as a sample. Id. At that point, Ortiz reached down and pulled out a paper bag on the table in front of Mora. (R11:34). Francisco Ramos reached in and pulled out a "football" package and opened it with a penknife exposing a quantity of white powder which appeared to be cocaine. Id. During these events, the defendant never touched the cocaine; he introduced Agent McCracken and Badalich as the buyers and "that was it." (R11:39-40).

Agent McCracken said that he then had to go to his bank in Fort Lauderdale to obtain the money; he expressed his displeasure to the defendant because the defendant had earlier that day advised McCracken that he did not need to have the money. (R11:34). McCracken and informant Badalich then left, purportedly to obtain the purchase money. Id.

Upon his return, Agent McCracken had with him an arrest team. (R11:35).

On entry into the warehouse, the defendant and two co-defendants were arrested and the cocaine was seized. (R11:35-6). Subsequently, agents arrested Francisco Ramos a short distance from the warehouse. (R11:36).

The facts pertaining to the defendant's entrapment defense are as follows:⁴

The defendant, who had no prior arrests (R11:48-9; R12:195), had previously been employed for fourteen years as a property manager for a large real estate family. (R12:187-8). However, in late 1983, this family sold its properties and the defendant became unemployed. (R12:188). The defendant had been out of work for approximately six months (R12:190), when, in mid-July of 1984, his wife and son traveled to New York to visit his wife's mother. (R12:177-8, 190). It was during this time that informant Badalich, who was cooperating with the government in hopes that the sentencing judge in his own case would be lenient with him for his having engaged defendant Rey in a drug transaction (R12:142-149), became "very persistent" and initiated some fifteen to twenty telephone calls to the defendant in an effort to engage the defendant in a drug transaction. (R12:168, 190). Badalich was aware of the defendant's increasingly bad financial situation. (R12:190). He started offering the defendant all kinds of deals regarding drugs. (R12:190-191). The defendant told Badalich that he had never done anything like that and would never do anything like that. (R12:191). After many visits and telephone calls,⁵ the defendant ultimately agreed to attempt to locate someone who could provide Badalich with cocaine. Id.

⁵ Of the fifteen to twenty telephone calls initiated by Badalich to the defendant over a three-month period, only about six of those calls were recorded on tape. (R11:59; R12:168). The DEA has no idea what transpired during the unmonitored telephone calls. (R11:36-7, 56-7; R12:153).

The defendant contacted Francisco Ramos, who had previously gone out with the defendant's daughter; the defendant knew that Ramos could provide cocaine from what his daughter had told him. (R12:192). Before Badalich persuaded him to do this, it never occurred to the defendant to ever get involved in a narcotics transaction, and he never would have done so. (R12:192, 194-5).

During the unrecorded telephone conversation of August 24, 1984, the defendant told Badalich to forget the cocaine transaction; however, Badalich told the defendant that "we must do it. We must do it this weekend, Bill. We must do it." (R12:193). On August 27, the defendant told Agent McCracken over the telephone not to bring his money for the reason that the defendant did not want to go through with the drug deal. (R12:193). During this telephone conversation, the defendant invited McCracken and Badalich to his house for lunch for the purpose of the defendant's delivering on a friendly basis his message "that I cannot do it." (R12:194, 205). The defendant was concerned with leaving it on a friendly basis because he was frightened. (R12:194).

During the government's cross-examination of the defendant, and in the presence of the jury, there was an emotional outburst in which the defendant asked the prosecutor why he did not produce any tapes reflecting that he did not want to do any drug deals, and why the prosecutor produced only tapes saying that he would do the deal. (R12:205-6).

At Sassy Cosmetics, the defendant never produced the cocaine, cut it open or touched it. (R11:39-40). Nor had the defendant been involved in fixing the price for the cocaine. (R11:65).

The defendant's wife testified that the defendant had never been involved in drugs prior to this case. (R12:182). Before her mid-July trip to New York, she and the defendant did not socialize with Badalich and they were not friends. (R12:178). However, after her return from New York, Badalich became "very very insistent around my house, my boat. Everywhere I was, there he was. My husband could not be with me. He would come to the house. Whisper in his ear. Take him away. I had problems with my husband.

I thought he was gay." (R12:179). Badalich would "constantly" call the defendant. Id. On August 27, 1984, the day Badalich and Agent McCracken came to her house, Mrs. Rey heard Agent McCracken using foul language and screaming at the defendant. (R12:181).⁷

The defendant presented character witnesses Allen Chase and Sol Taplin. Chase, a Special Agent with the Criminal Investigation Division of the Internal Revenue Service, has known the defendant since 1976; Chase and his family socialize with the defendant and his children. (R11:118-19). Chase has spent time in the defendant's Miami Beach home and in his apartment unit on Plantation Key. (R11:119). Agent Chase is trained to conduct financial investigations which involve drugs and the detection of wealth that is not legitimately earned. (R11:120). During the years he has known the defendant, and been in his home, Chase has never seen any indication of the fact that the defendant was ever involved in any occupation other than that which Chase knew the defendant to be involved in. (R11:120). Chase never saw any spending habits of the defendant that were inconsistent with what they should have been. Id.

Mr. Taplin, vice mayor of Bal Harbour, Florida, and a member of its City Commission for twenty-one years, has known the defendant for the past twelve years. (R12:173-4). Taplin knows the defendant's reputation for truth and honesty to be a good one; in addition, the defendant has a reputation as a law-abiding person. (R12:175).

THE JURY'S DELIBERATIONS AND THE ALLEN CHARGE

Both at the conclusion of the government's case (R11:97-8), and at the conclusion of all of the evidence (R12:212), the defendant's motion for judgment of acquittal was denied. The jury retired to deliberate on its verdict at 10:25 a.m. on Friday, November 22, 1985. (R13:295). During its deliberations, the jury had several questions for the court. The first such question arose at 1:45 p.m., during the first day of deliberations. (R13:296-7). The question inquired as to when Agent McCracken made his computer check into a William Rey. (R13:296). The district judge, with the concurrence of the defense and the government, instructed the jury to rely on its collective memory. Id.

The jury's next question inquired as to what it should do if it could not reach a unanimous verdict; the court asserted, out of the jury's presence, that it would give a modified Allen charge if the jury indicated that it was deadlocked. Defense counsel objected and the court observed that it had not yet decided to give the Allen charge. At 4:05 p.m. on the first day's deliberations, the court brought the jury in and advised them that they would adjourn until Tuesday, November 26, 1985. (R13:299, 302). Thus, on this day, the jury deliberated for approximately five and one-half hours before adjournment.

At 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, November 26, 1985, the jury resumed its deliberations. (R14:315). At approximately noon, the jury returned with a question: "We the jury on the case...cannot come up with a unanimous decision. We ask at this time for your decision." Id. The court ruled that it would give the Allen charge and the defense objected. (R14:315-16). Accordingly, the trial judge brought the jury back into the courtroom and administered the Allen charge. (R14:316-18). See A.31-34 for a verbatim reproduction of the Allen charge administered by the trial judge. The jury returned to continue its deliberations at 12:10 p.m. (R14:318).

At some unspecified time thereafter, the jury returned with its next note advising that the foreperson of the jury, Myriam Zayas, wished to withdraw as foreperson and to allow the jury to choose someone else. (R14:319). The parties agreed that the jury would be instructed that they may select any foreperson from their number. Id.

At 1:45 p.m., the jury returned with its verdict, signed by the new foreperson, Martha Unger. (R14:320; R1:102). The verdict was guilty as charged on all counts. (R14:320-321). Thus, on the second day of deliberations, the jury deliberated for approximately two and one-half hours before the trial court administered the Allen charge. Between that event and the return of the verdict, one hour and thirty-five minutes elapsed, during which, at a point in time unspecified in the record, the foreperson of the jury requested to resign as foreperson, was given permission to do so, and the jury elected a new foreperson.

On appeal to the Eleventh Circuit, the defendant argued, inter alia, that the giving of the Allen charge "unduly coerced the jury into reaching a verdict, and thereby, violated his right to due process." (A.19).⁷ Believing itself "bound by precedent," the Eleventh Circuit upheld the trial court's giving of the Allen charge in this case, notwithstanding the court's finding that "[i]f this were a question of first impression, we would find the Allen charge in this case impermissible." (A.29). This was so, the court found, because:

as we see it, the Allen charge interferes with the jurors when they are performing their most important role: determining guilt or innocence in a close case. It unjustifiably increases the risk that an innocent person will be convicted as a result of the juror abandoning his honestly-held beliefs.

[Eleventh Circuit's
emphasis]. (A.29-9).

The Eleventh Circuit focused on both the particular instruction given in the case at bar, and the general use of the Allen charge. With regard to the particular instruction given in the case at bar, the court found "particularly improper" that portion of the trial judge's Allen instruction stressing that:

"the trial has been expensive in time effort, money and emotional strain to both the defense and the prosecution... . Obviously, another trial would only serve to increase the cost to both sides." [Eleventh Circuit's emphasis]. (A.22).

The Eleventh Circuit found that the "practical effect" of this instruction is to "discourage jurors in the minority and to pressure them to abandon their honestly-held beliefs, not in response to considerations regarding the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but in response to the expediency of saving expenses." (A.22-3). By stressing "obviously" and "only," the trial judge "effectively tells the minority that holding out for their position is pointless, because the majority view will prevail on retrial." (A.23).

In addition to its objections to the particular instruction given in the case at bar, the Eleventh Circuit found the Allen instruction in general to be unduly coercive on the minority jurors holding out for acquittal. See A.23-25. The court based this conclusion on the following analysis.

The court quoted two paragraphs from the Allen charge as follows:

"[I]f a substantial majority of your number are in favor of a conviction, those of you who disagree should reconsider whether your doubt is a reasonable one, since it appears to make no effective impression upon the minds of the others.

"On the other hand, if a majority or even a lesser number of you are in favor of an acquittal, the rest of you should ask yourselves again and most thoughtfully whether you should accept the weight and sufficiency of the evidence which fails to convince your fellow jurors beyond a reasonable doubt."
(A.23-4).

The Eleventh Circuit observed that

[b]ecause this instruction asks jurors to discount their views if they are in the minority or in the majority, it virtually guarantees jury confusion. "Such a charge is so difficult to comprehend that...it is 'an invitation to frolic with Alice in Wonderland.'" State v. Nicholson, 315 So.2d 639, 642 (La. 1975)(quoting United States v. Fioravanti, 412 F.2d 407, 417 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 837, 90 S.Ct. 97, 24 L.Ed.2d 88 (1969). [Eleventh Circuit's emphasis]. (A.24).

The Eleventh Circuit found that "[p]ractically, the pressure to change position will fall most heavily on the minority." [Eleventh Circuit's emphasis]. (A.25).

Finally, the Eleventh Circuit observed:

The last thing such a minority holdout juror needs is for the trial judge-cloaked with the full authority of his office-to even hint that holding out will be futile in the long run and that a verdict could be reached if the holdout would just reconsider.

The jury trial system has not malfunctioned when the jury cannot reach a verdict. One of the safeguards against the conviction of innocent persons built into our criminal justice system is that a jury may not be able to reach a unanimous verdict. Furthermore, a hung jury does not necessarily result in a retrial: one or both parties frequently change their view of the case so that a plea arrangement is reached or charges are dropped. Consequently, there is no necessity for judges to force a verdict. (A.27-8).

However, notwithstanding the Eleventh Circuit's express finding of coercion and its desire to reverse the defendant's conviction in this case, the court declined to do so, in view of the binding precedent of the former Fifth Circuit's decision in United States v. Bailey, 480 F.2d 518 (5th Cir. 1973)(en banc), wherein a majority of the judges on the en banc Fifth Circuit upheld the use of the Allen charge. (A.20-21). Inviting a petition for rehearing en banc, the panel several times opined that "the time is ripe for reconsideration of the Bailey decision" (A.21), and that "[w]hile we think the full court ought to reconsider Bailey and its progeny, we are, for how at least, overcome by precedent." (A.31).⁸

The Eleventh Circuit observed that in the years since this Court's nineteenth century approval of "an instruction urging the jury to reach a verdict" (A.19) in Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492, 17 S.Ct. 154, 41 L.Ed.2d 528 (1896), the "modern judicial trend...is against the Allen charge." (A.20). The court noted that in the exercise of their supervisory power, three federal circuit courts have prohibited Allen charges since 1969, four other federal circuit courts have sharply curtailed their use, and at least eighteen states have rejected the Allen charge.⁹ See A.20, and notes 10 through 12. (A.40-41).

In addition, the Eleventh Circuit observed both the criticism of the Allen instruction within the legal community (see A.20 and n.13, A.41), and the American Bar Association's recommendation against the use of the Allen charge and proposed guidelines. See A.20 & n.14, A.41.

After setting forth the above "modern judicial trend" against the Allen charge, the Eleventh Circuit observed: "Yet, this circuit condones the Allen charge which has a potential for serious interference with the fact-finding process." (A.26).

It is this decision from which certiorari review is sought. The Eleventh Circuit denied a petition for rehearing and for rehearing en banc on April 29, 1987. (A.43-45)

REASONS FOR GRANTING WRIT

THE ALLEN INSTRUCTION SANCTIONED BY THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT AND GIVEN TO THE JURY IN THE CASE AT BAR OVER DEFENSE OBJECTION UNDULY COERCED THE JURY INTO RENDERING ITS VERDICT AGAINST THE PETITIONER IN THIS CASE WHERE THE ALLEN INSTRUCTION IMMEDIATELY CAUSED THE RESIGNATION OF THE JURY FOREWOMAN, SUBSTITUTION OF ANOTHER FOREPERSON, AND A PROMPT VERDICT OF GUILT AGAINST THE PETITIONER, AND THE ALLEN INSTRUCTION AS PRESENTLY UTILIZED IN THE FEDERAL COURTS UNDERMINES CONFIDENCE IN THE JURY'S FACT FINDING FUNCTION, IN VIOLATION OF THE PETITIONER'S RIGHT TO A FAIR AND IMPARTIAL JURY AND TO DUE PROCESS OF LAW PURSUANT TO THE SIXTH AND FIFTH AMENDMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES CONSITUTION.

1. This case presents a question of great practical and doctrinal importance that has sharply split the federal circuit courts of appeals and the state courts. Despite finding that the use of the Allen charge increases the risk that an innocent person will be wrongly convicted, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals here holds that its use cannot be error because precedence and precedence alone requires such a result. In sanctioning the use of this instruction, the Eleventh Circuit places itself in conflict with three federal circuit courts of appeals which have abandoned the instruction,¹⁰ four circuit courts of appeals which have severely curtailed its use,¹¹ and nineteen Turner v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 466 (1965), this Court reversed a conviction where the two principal witnesses for the prosecution, deputy sheriffs, had mingled freely with the sequestered jurors during the trial. According to this Court, the close association of the jurors and these witnesses created the possibility that the jurors would be swayed by their personal feelings for these witnesses. Finally, in Jenkins v. United States, 380 U.S. 445 (1965), this Court held that it was impermissibly coercive for a judge to tell a jury that they were required to reach a verdict.

b. The Allen instruction denies the accused his rights to a fair trial and to due process of law. Like the instruction that "[y]ou have got to reach a decision in this case," Jenkins at 446, the Allen charge brings down upon the jury the authority of the court and tells the jury that the court does not believe that the jurors have worked hard enough to resolve their differences. United States v. Thomas, 449 F.2d at 1182-83. The pressure to reach a verdict is further enhanced by the instruction's interjection of the cost and expense of a retrial, a consideration wholly irrelevant to the question of guilt or innocence. Moreover, the instruction, in all of its various forms, directs itself to the failure of the minority to adequately consider the opinion of the majority, thus increasing the likelihood that an individual juror will surrender conscientiously held beliefs not because he was convinced that he was wrong but because he could no longer withstand the pressure of the many. Id. at 1183; United States v. Anguilo, 485 F.2d at 39; O'Sullivan, Deadlocked Juries and the Allen Charge, 37 Me.L.Rev. 167, 170 (1985).

c. The Allen charge also denies the accused a fair trial because it is conviction prone. While the government may argue that the Allen charge serves the interests of judicial economy, it is not the instruction's propensity to bring back verdicts which has so endeared itself to the government, it is the instruction's propensity to bring back verdicts of guilty. "The charge is used precisely because it works, because it can blast a verdict out of a jury otherwise unable to agree that a person is guilty." United States v. Bailey, 468 F.2d 652, 666 (5th Cir. 1972), on rehearing, 480 F.2d 518 (5th Cir. 1973)(en banc).

2. The decision in this case is particularly indefensible because the Eleventh Circuit expressly found a substantial risk that this jury was coerced but felt bound by precedent to affirm. Such a mechanical application of stare decisis can only serve to undermine respect for the judiciary. Moreover, to the extent that a juror or jurors held conscientious reservations about the defendant's guilt, the surrender of those reservations, as a direct consequence of this instruction, increased the risk that an innocent person was convicted, thus calling into question the reliability of the fact finding process. Such a result runs counter to decisions of the Court intended to enhance the search for truth. See, e.g., Harris v. New York, 401 U.S. 222 (1971); United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897 (1984). The Allen charge undermines confidence in the fact finding process no less so than when the jury is deprived of material impeachment evidence, United States v. Bagley, ___ U.S. ___, 105 S.Ct. 3375, 3381 (1985), or when defense counsel renders ineffective assistance, Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 694 (1984). Its coercive effect collides with the Court's "overriding concern with the justice of the finding of guilt." United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 112 (1976). Particularly where instructions to the jury as finders of fact are concerned, the due process clause "must be held to safeguard" the principle "that one accused of a crime is entitled to have his guilt or innocence determined solely on the basis of the evidence introduced at trial, and not on grounds of. . .other circumstances not adduced as proof at trial.", Taylor v. Kentucky, 436 U.S. 478, 485 (1978), such as the Allen instruction which the Eleventh Circuit in this case found to be impermissibly coercive and a "serious interference with the fact-finding process." (A.26, 29).

a. The panel found two portions of the charge given herein improper. That portion of the charge which told the jury:

the trial has been expensive in time, effort, money and emotional strain to both the defense and the prosecution... . Obviously, another trial would only serve to increase the costs to both sides. [Eleventh Circuit's emphasis].

functioned to pressure jurors in the minority into abandoning their honestly held beliefs, not in response to considerations of guilt or innocence, but in response to the expediency of saving expenses. In effect this instruction told the jurors that holding out for their position was pointless because the majority view would prevail on retrial. (A.23).

b. That portion of the charge which told the jury:

[I]f a substantial majority of your number are in favor of a conviction, those of you who disagree should reconsider whether your doubt is a reasonable one, since it appears to make no effective impression upon the minds of the others.

On the other hand, if a majority or even a lesser number of you are in favor of an acquittal, the rest of you should ask yourselves again and most thoughtfully whether you should accept the weight and sufficiency of the evidence which fails to convince your fellow jurors beyond a reasonable doubt.

functioned to instruct the jurors to discount their views if they were in the majority or the minority, guaranteeing jury confusion. (A.24).

Moreover:

This instruction can intimidate individual jurors. After hearing this confusing instruction, a juror will likely remember only that the judge wants them to reach a verdict and that they should reconsider their opinions. Practically, the pressure to change position will fall most heavily on the minority.

[Eleventh Circuit's emphasis]
(A.25).

Id. This unbalanced instruction, it must be noted, totally fails to address the majority that favors conviction; no caution for them to reconsider their view is included.

c. The Eleventh Circuit's opinion clearly indicates its view that, especially "in a close case," the Allen instruction interferes with the jurors when they are performing their most important role, the determination of guilt or innocence. That the court viewed this case as a "close case" is manifest since the Eleventh Circuit, finding itself "overcome by precedent," "would find the Allen charge in this case impermissible." (A.29, 31).

Factually, this case presented the jury with a strong entrapment defense. The defendant, never before arrested, let alone convicted of any crime (R11:48-9; R12:195), enjoyed an excellent reputation in his community for honesty, good character, and as a law-abiding person. See R11:118-120; R12:173-5. Allen Chase, a Special Agent with the Criminal Investigation Division of the Internal Revenue Service, who had known the defendant for many years and whose family socialized with the defendant and his children, was trained as an IRS agent to conduct financial investigations with a view toward detection of wealth that was not legitimately earned. (R11:118-119). During his years of close association with the defendant, Chase had never observed any indication that the defendant had ever been involved in drug trafficking. (R11:120).

DEA Agent McCracken, after purportedly learning the defendant's name from the informant involved in this case, ran the name "William Rey" through the NADIS computer and learned that a "William Rey" was involved in drug trafficking; however, McCracken failed to call up from the computer the readily available case and file number given along with the name "William Rey," and did not thereby learn that the "William Rey" mentioned in the computer was not the defendant in the case at bar. (R11:44-48).

The jury also heard of the three month pursuit of the defendant by the government's informant, desperate to avoid a jail sentence arising out of his own unrelated drug prosecution. (R4:15; R6:100; R9:18, 19; R11:55). The government's informant initiated some fifteen to twenty unrecorded and unmonitored telephone calls to the defendant during the three month period that the informant attempted to involve the defendant in a cocaine transaction. (R11:59; R12:168). The DEA had no idea what transpired during these unmonitored calls. (R11:36-7, 56-7; R12:153).

Aware of the defendant's increasingly bad financial situation, the informant persisted in his efforts to convince the defendant to attempt to locate cocaine for the informant. (R12:190-191). During this period of pursuit, the defendant's wife was so concerned with the defendant's distraction with the informant that she "thought [defendant] was gay." (R12:179). The jury heard the defendant's fervent statement over the telephone to the informant that "We have to talk" (R11:37), made just prior to the undercover agent's grabbing the telephone and demanding whether the deal would go through. Id. The defendant was attempting to extricate himself from the transaction and was fearful of the informant and Agent McCracken. (R12:194).

During the jury's deliberations, the jury inquired as to when Agent McCracken made his computer check into "a William Rey." (R13:296). Subsequently, the jury indicated that it may not be able to reach a unanimous verdict. (R13:299). During the next day's deliberations, the jury announced its deadlock. (R14:315). Within minutes of the trial judge's administration of the Allen charge over defense objection (R14:315-16), the jury foreperson announced her desire to resign as foreperson and the jury then selected another foreperson. (R14:319). Within minutes of that substitution of forepersons, the jury returned its verdict of guilty. (R14:320).

It is against this factual backdrop that the Eleventh Circuit found that "the Allen charge in this case [was] impermissible." (A.29).

d. The Allen instruction is rooted in the myth of the pigheaded juror, a person so "stubborn or recalcitrant" that he would "persist in blind adherence to his position" rather than listen to reason; a person more interested in exercising power than in administering justice. United States v. Thomas, 449 F.2d at 1188 (Judge Robb dissenting). There is, however, reason to doubt the existence of such an "unreasonable man." The results of the University of Chicago Jury Study Project indicate that the truly stubborn juror is a rarity, that hung juries almost never occur unless the first ballot reflects a truly substantial division of opinion. Note, Due Process, Judicial Economy, and the Hung Jury: Reexamination of the Allen Charge, 53 Va.L.Rev. 123, 146 (1967):

Moreover, it seems reasonable to argue that the stubborn or unreasonable juror is precisely the one least likely to yield to the blandishments of the Allen charge. The more likely effect of such an instruction is that the genuinely troubled and conscientious juror or the timid juror who is really not convinced of the guilt of the accused, but who desires to perform his function to the satisfaction of the court, will be overborne by the plea for reconsideration.

Id.

e. We seriously question whether the hung jury constitutes a problem of such magnitude as to justify the risk of a procedure which may well undermine a defendant's right to a unanimous verdict. It has been estimated that only five per cent of criminal jury trials end in a failure to reach a verdict. Note, supra, at 145. Further, those federal circuits which have abandoned the charge have done so in part because of the perception that it would be cheaper to retry those few cases which would have ended in a hung jury, then continue to consider the inevitable appeals which result from the use of the charge. United States v. Silvern, 484 F.2d 883; United States v. Thomas, 449 F.2d at 1184; United States v. Fioravanti, 407 F.2d at 420. Finally, none of the jurisdictions which have abandoned the charge have found it necessary to bring it back, strong evidence that the courts are not being overwhelmed by a glut of hung juries.

f. To the extent that further instruction is necessary when the jury is deadlocked, the instruction promulgated by the ABA serves that purpose without coercing the jury. See

A.46-48. Five federal circuits and eighteen states have either mandated or recommended the use of the ABA instruction in place of the Allen charge. O'Sullivan, 171-72 & note 35.

g. Like reasonable doubt itself, the hung jury stands as a safeguard to the conviction of the innocent. As Judge Edmondson recognized in his opinion herein, the system has not failed when the jury is unable to reach a verdict. (A.28). A hung jury is simply a necessary implication of the requirement that the verdict be unanimous. Moreover, a hung jury does not necessarily result in a retrial. Often one or both parties change their view of the case so that a plea agreement is reached or charges are dropped. It may even lead to the kind of investigation which should have occurred in the first place. To the extent that the Allen charge impedes this salutary effect it does a great disservice to the criminal justice system. After 91 years of experience with this instruction, it is time that it be reconsidered.

CONCLUSION

Were the defendant here tried in the District of Columbia Circuit, the Third Circuit, or the Seventh Circuit, this petition would not have been necessary. The panel of the Eleventh Circuit that decided this case believed itself "overcome by precedent" (A.31) despite its view that the Allen charge, sanctioned by this Court since 1896, constitutes a "serious interference with the fact-finding process." (A.27). The live conflict within the federal circuits and between the various states on this constitutional issue is manifest. Certiorari review is essential to resolve this recurring dichotomy of opinion in the nation's courts.

For the reasons stated in this petition, a writ of certiorari should issue to review the judgment and opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

UNITED STATES v. WILLIAM REY 811 F.2d 1453 (11th Cir. 1987)

A.1-42

ORDER ON REHEARING

A.43-45

ABA STANDARD 15-4.4

A.46-48

UNITED STATES OF America, Plaintiff-Appellee,

v.

William REY, Defendant-Appellant.

No. 86-5093

United States Court of Appeals, Eleventh Circuit.

March 9, 1987.

Defendant was convicted of conspiracy to possess cocaine with intent to distribute, actual possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, and use of telephone to facilitate commission of cocaine conspiracy, in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, No. 84-6129 CR-ALH, Alcee L. Hastings, J. Defendant appealed. The Court of Appeals, Edmondson, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) Government's use of contingently motivated informers did not violate due process in drug-related case; agent participated as would-be buyer in cocaine "buy," and defendant, rather than government, called informers as witnesses, and (2) although trial judge's Allen charge to jury, urging jury to reach verdict, tended to coerce jury into reaching verdict, Court was bound by precedent and conviction on drug-related charges would be affirmed.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law - 37(5)

Government's use of contingently motivated informers does not create entrapment defense; defendant who was predisposed to commit crime cannot be entrapped, regardless of how outrageous or overreaching government's conduct may be.

2. Criminal Law - 37(5)

Use of contingently motivated informer is lawful where government does not preselect target of informer's investigation, or where payment is contingent on successful investigation in general or successful investigation of particular crime, rather than successful prosecution of particular individual.

3. Criminal Law - 36.5

Payment of informant's expenses is not improper contingent arrangement.

4. Criminal Law - 36.5

Even where government pays informer to convict particular person, government's conduct is not improper so long as there is some justification for this arrangement.

5. Constitutional Law - 257.5

In rare cases, use of contingently motivated informer might be so outrageous as to violate due process.

U.S.C.A. Const. Amends. 5, 14.

6. Constitutional Law - 257.5

Government's use of contingently motivated informers did not violate due process in drug-related case; agent participated as would-be buyer in cocaine "buy," and defendant, rather than government, called contingently motivated informers as witnesses to testify as part of entrapment defense.

7. Criminal Law - 304(16)

Court may take judicial notice of its own records and records of inferior courts.

8. Criminal Law - 865(1)

Although trial judge's Allen charge to jury, urging jury to reach verdict, tended to coerce jury into reaching verdict, especially in light of trial judge's stressing of cost of another trial and asking jurors to discount their views, court was bound by precedent and conviction on drug-related charges would be affirmed.

cocaine with intent to distribute, actual possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, and use of a telephone to facilitate the commission of the cocaine conspiracy. We affirm the judgment of the district court.

I. The Williamson Issue

Rey contends that an undercover agent of the Drug Enforcement Agency, McCracken, selected him as the target of an investigation. Furthermore, Rey alleges that the DEA asked two informants, Badalich and Kulowitch, to participate in the investigation and, pursuant to a plea arrangement, promised them more lenient treatment with respect to criminal charges pending against them in return for their cooperation. According to Rey, the DEA's use of contingently motivated informants violated his due process rights under the doctrine announced by the former Fifth Circuit in Williamson v. United States, 311 F.2d 441 (5th Cir.1962).¹

The government disputes Rey's factual allegations, claiming that informant Badalich suggested Rey as an investigatory subject. Moreover, the government denies that its agreement with Badalich was contingent on the investigation of Rey. Therefore, the government contends that its conduct did not violate Rey's due process rights under the Williamson doctrine.

The United States magistrate determined that Williamson is still good law in this circuit and recommended that the case against Rey be dismissed "because of a per se and a fortiori violation of the Williamson rule against contingently motivated informants." The district court rejected this recommendation, ruling that "the issue is one of entrapment and must therefore be decided by a jury."

In Williamson, supra, the government agreed to pay informant Moye an allowance of the ten dollars per diem, plus a two hundred dollars reward if he purchased moonshine whiskey from defendant Williamson leading to Williamson's conviction and a one hundred dollar reward if he made a like purchase from co-defendant Lowrey. 311 F.2d at 442-43; id. at 446 (Cameron, J., dissenting). A divided panel of the former Fifth Circuit reversed Williamson's conviction, holding that the government's conduct was improper.

Judge Rives held that defendants' convictions must be reversed on the issue of entrapment. Id. at 441. Judge Rives stated that:

It may possibly be that the Government investigators had such certain knowledge that Williamson and Lowrey were engaged in illicit liquor dealings that they were justified in contracting with Moye on a contingent fee basis, $200.00 for Williamson and $100.00 for Lowrey, to produce the legally admissible evidence against each of them. It may be also that the investigators carefully instructed Moye on the rules against entrapment and had it clearly understood that Moye would not induce them to commit a crime, but would simply offer them an opportunity for a sale. None of these facts or circumstances were developed in the evidence....

Without some such justification or explanation, we cannot sanction a contingent fee agreement to produce evidence against particular named defendants as to crimes not yet committed. Such an arrangement might tend to a "frame up," or to cause an informer to induce or persuade innocent person to commit crimes which they had no previous intent or purpose to commit....

Moye's deposition standing alone furnishes prima facie evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the Government investigators in employing Moye on a contingent fee basis. Lacking any contradiction, justification or explanation of such a basis of employment, the convictions of the defendants resulting from Moye's services cannot be sustained.

Id. at 444-45 (emphasis added).

In a special concurrence, Judge Brown held that the case did not involve entrapment. Rather, Judge Brown indicated, the government's conduct violated due process: "the means used to 'make' the case are essentially revolting to an ordered society." Id. at 445. Judge Cameron dissented. Id.

[1] To the extent that Williamson held that the government's use of contingently-motivated informers creates an entrapment defense, it is no longer good law. The Supreme Court has subsequently held that the entrapment defense focuses on the subjective predisposition of the defendant to commit a crime, rather than on the conduct of the government. Where a defendant is predisposed to commit a crime, he cannot be entrapped, regardless of how outrageous or overreaching the government's conduct may be. Hampton v. United States, 425 U.S. 484, 96 S.Ct. 1646, 48 L.Ed.2d 113 (1976); United States v. Russell, 411 U.S. 423, 93 S.Ct. 1637, 36 L.Ed.2d 366 (1973).

Indeed, this circuit has held that "Williamson is not an entrapment case at all, since there was little question that the defendants were predisposed to commit the crimes for which they were convicted." United States v. Walker, 720 F.2d 1527, 1529 (11th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1108, 104 S.Ct. 1614, 80 L.Ed.2d 143 (1984); see also United States v. Richardson, 764 F.2d 1514, 1520 n. 1 (11th Cir.1985), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 106 S.Ct. 320, 88 L.Ed.2d 303 (1985). Therefore, the district court in the case sub judice erred by treating the Williamson issue as an entrapment defense.

[2-4] In light of the decisions rendered by this court, whether Williamson has continuing validity in this circuit as a due process doctrine is questionable. Prior to the division of the former Fifth Circuit into the present Fifth and Eleventh Circuits, the former Fifth Circuit never followed Williamson to reverse a conviction.² Nor has the Eleventh Circuit ever applied Williamson to reverse a conviction. Instead, in more than thirty reported opinions decided subsequent to Williamson involving contingently-motivated informers, the Eleventh Circuit and its predecessor, the former Fifth Circuit, have continually distinguished Williamson and restricted it.³ It is interesting to note that even Judge Brown, the only judge on the original Williamson panel who treated the government's conduct not as entrapment, but as a due process violation, subsequently joined a per curiam opinion affirming Williamson's conviction after retrial on remand.

Williamson v. United States, (Williamson II), 340 F.2d 612 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 381 U.S. 950, 85
S.Ct. 1803, 14 L.Ed.2d 724 (1965).

[5] In rare cases, use of a contingently motivated informer might, conceivably, be so outrageous as to violate due process. Cf. United States
v. Russell, 411 U.S. 423, 431-32, 93
S.Ct. 1637, 1643, 36 L.Ed.2d 366
(1973); Rochin v. California, 342 U.S.
165, 72 S.Ct. 205, 96 L.Ed. 183 (1953);
United States v. Tobias, 662 F.2d 381, 385-86 (5th Cir. Unit B 1981), cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1108, 102 S.Ct. 2908, 73 L.Ed.2d 1317 (1982).⁴ But this does not mean that the Williamson doctrine is good law, i.e., that absent justification or explanation, payment of an informer contingent upon obtaining the conviction of a specific person in itself violates due process.

[6] We need not decide, as a general proposition, whether Williamson is actually the law in this circuit. Instead, we look to the concrete facts of this case. Agent McCracken participated as the would-be purchaser in the cocaine "buy" in this case. Where "the [drug] buy was not made by the informer, ... but rather by the agent, ... the problem noted in Williamson ... that a contingent fee arrangement might tend to a 'frameup' by an informer is not present." United States v. Jenkins, 480 F.2d 1198, 1199-1120 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 913, 94 S.Ct. 256, 38 L.Ed.2d 151 (1973); see also, United States v. McClure, 577 F.2d 1021, 1022-23 (5th Cir. 1978) (participation of agent in drug buy eliminates possibility that informer fabricated evidence to collect a fee).

Moreover, the government did not call the contingently-motivated informers as witnesses in this case; instead, the informants were called by appellant to testify as part of his entrapment defense. Thus, the potential problem of a contingently-motivated informer being presented by the government as a witness and perjuring his testimony was not present in this case.

[7] In contrast, during Williamson's first trial, the prosecution relied on the informant's testimony as part of the government's case. At the beginning of the government's case in chief, the government introduced the informant's deposition into evidence and read it to the jury. The informant had died prior to Williamson's first trial. Therefore, in Williamson the potential problem of perjury by a contingently motivated government witness was not only present, but aggravated by the fact that the jury heard the informant's testimony read from a cold deposition and was unable to observe the informant's demeanor when assessing his credibility⁵

Even assuming that Rey's version of the facts is true,⁶ the government's use of contingently-motivated informers in this case did not violate due process. Although Rey may find the use of such informers to be unsavory, their use certainly did not rise to the level of a constitutional violation.⁷

If Williamson remains, in reality, the law of this circuit, it does not apply to the circumstances of this case.

II. The Allen Charge

The jury deliberated for approximately five and a half hours on Friday, November 22, 1985, and resumed its deliberations at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, November 26, 1985. At noon on Tuesday, the jury informed the judge that it could not reach a unanimous verdict. The judge called the jury into the courtroom and, over defendant's objection, gave the jury a modified Allen instruction.⁸ The jury resumed its deliberation at 12:10 p.m.

Shortly thereafter, the jury foreperson resigned, with the permission of the court; and the jury selected a new foreperson in her stead. At 1:45 p.m., the jury returned with a verdict of guilty on all three counts.

Rey argues that the giving of the modified Allen charge unduly coerced the jury into reaching a verdict and, thereby, violated his right to due process. Because of the terms, tone and timing of the charge, this panel is seriously concerned by the use of the modified Allen charge in this case.

The instruction of which Rey complains derives its name from Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492, 17 S.Ct. 154, 41 L.Ed. 528 (1896), in which the Supreme Court upheld an instruction urging the jury to reach a verdict.⁹ Subsequently, courts adopted many variations of this jury instruction.

The modern judicial trend, however, is against the Allen charge. In the exercise of their supervisory power, three federal circuit courts have prohibited Allen charges since 1969,¹⁰ and four other federal circuit courts have sharply curtailed their use.¹¹ Moreover, during the last twenty-seven years, at least eighteen states have rejected the Allen charge.¹²

Scholars have sharply criticized the Allen charge because of its coercive impact on juries.¹³ Also, the American Bar Association has recommended against the use of the Allen charge and proposed guidelines for less coercive instructions.¹⁴

In 1973, the former Fifth Circuit considered the propriety of the Allen charge. United States v. Bailey, 480 F.2d 518 (5th Cir.1973)(en banc). The court split on this issue, with a majority of nine judges upholding use of the Allen charge. Seven judges, however, joined a dissenting opinion advocating prohibition of the Allen charge.

After passage of more than thirteen years, the time is ripe for reconsideration of the Bailey decision. The composition of this court has changed markedly since the Bailey decision. Indeed, only two judges who participated in the Bailey decision remain as active judges in this circuit--and both of these joined the dissenting opinion against the Allen charge. Moreover, the movement in opposition to the Allen charge has continued to grow since the Bailey decision in 1973: at least five more jurisdictions have rejected the Allen charge.¹⁵

[8] The charge given by the trial judge was virtually identical to the pattern Allen instruction for this circuit. Although it lacked some of the most offensive provisions of other Allen-type charges, it still tended to coerce the jury into reaching a verdict. Two aspects of the instruction seem particularly improper. First, the trial judge stressed that:

the trial as been expensive in time, effort, money and emotional strain to both the defense and the prosecution.... Obviously, another trial would only serve to increase the costs to both sides. (emphasis added).

The practical effect of such an instruction is to discourage jurors in the minority and to pressure them to abandon their honestly held beliefs, not in response to considerations regarding the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but in response to the expediency of saving expenses. By stating that "obviously" the "only" effect of a new trial would be "to increase ... costs," the judge effectively tells the minority that holding out for their position is pointless, because the majority view will prevail on retrial.

Second, the Allen charge in this case included the following language:

[I]f a substantial majority of your number are in favor of a conviction, those of you who disagree should reconsider whether your doubt is a reasonable one, since it appears to make no effective impression upon the minds of the others.

On the other hand, if a majority or even a lesser number of you are in favor of an acquittal, the rest of you should ask yourselves again and most thoughtfully whether you should accept the weight and sufficiency of the evidence which fails to convince your fellow jurors beyond a reasonable doubt.

Because this instruction asks jurors to discount their views if they are in the minority or in the majority, it virtually guarantees jury confusion.

"Such a charge is so difficult to comprehend that ... it is 'an invitation to frolic with Alice in Wonderland.'"

State v. Nicholson, 315 So.2d 639, 642 (La. 1975)(quoting United States v. Fioravanti, 412 F.2d 407, 417 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 837, 90 S.Ct. 97, 24 L.Ed.2d 88 (1969)).

This instruction can intimidate individual jurors. After hearing this confusing instruction, a juror will likely remember only that the judge wants them to reach a verdict and that they should reconsider their opinions. Practically, the pressure to change position will fall most heavily on the minority.

"[T]he central purpose of a criminal trial is to decide the factual question of the defendant's guilt or innocence." Rose v. Clark, ___ U.S. ___, 106 S.Ct. 3101, 3105-06, 92 L.Ed.2d 460 (1986) (quoting United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 230, 95 S.Ct. 2160, 2166, 45 L.Ed.2d 141 (1975)). Under the Sixth Amendment, a person charged with a serious federal crime has the right to have the factual question of his guilt or innocence determined by a jury of his peers. See Baldwin v. New York, 399 U.S. 66, 90 S.Ct. 1886, 26 L.Ed.2d 437 (1970). Where a federal defendant avails himself of this right, he may be convicted only if the jury unanimously finds him guilty. Fed.R.Crim.P. 31(a); Apodaca v. Oregon, 406 U.S. 404, 92 S.Ct. 1628, 32 L.Ed.2d 184 (1972); Johnson v. Louisiana, 406 U.S. 356, 92 S.Ct. 1620, 32 L.Ed.2d 152 (1972); United States v. Smedes, 760 F.2d 109, 111 (6th Cir.1985).

In other contexts, courts have been careful to ensure that the jury performs its crucial fact-finding role free of prejudice, improper influences, and coercion. See, e.g., Isaacs v. Kemp, 778 F.2d 1482 (11th Cir.1985) (pretrial publicity); United States v. Delaney, 732 F.2d 639 (8th Cir.1984) (juror communication with policeman during trial); United States v.

Richardson, 651 F.2d 1251 (8th Cir. 1981)(publicity during trial). Yet, this circuit condones the Allen charge which has a potential for serious interference with the fact-finding process.

In some cases, the duty of a juror is rigorous. Deliberations can be long, hard and heated. It is each juror's duty to stand by his honestly held views; this can require courage and stamina. A majority of jurors eager to go home can exert tremendous pressure on a minority juror who is seriously trying to do his duty. The last thing such a minority holdout juror needs is for the trial judge--cloaked with the full authority of his office--to even hint that holding out will be futile in the long run and that a verdict could be reached if the holdout would just reconsider.

The jury trial system has not malfunctioned when the jury cannot reach a verdict. One of the safeguards against the conviction of innocent persons built into our criminal justice system is that a jury may not be able to reach a unanimous verdict. Furthermore, a hung jury does not necessarily result in a retrial; one or both parties frequently change their view of the case so that a plea arrangement is reached or charges are dropped. Consequently, there is no necessity for judges to force a verdict.

As we see it, the Allen charges interferes with the jurors when they are performing their most important role: determining guilt or innocence in a close case. It unjustifiably increases the risk that an innocent person will be convicted as a result of the juror abandoning his honestly-held beliefs.

If this were a question of first impression, we would find the Allen charge in this case impermissible. But we are bound by precedent. Our predecessor, the former Fifth Circuit, gave a general imprimatur to Allen charges in the en banc Bailey decision. This circuit has upheld an Allen charge that employed very similar language. United States v. Alonso, 740 F.2d 862, 876-78 (11th Cir.1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1166, 105 S.Ct. 928, 83 L.Ed.2d 939 (1985). Also, the former Fifth Circuit has upheld Allen charges under circumstances that suggest more coercion than in the present case. See, e.g., Andrews v. United States, 309 F.2d 127,

129 (5th Cir.1962), cert. denied, 372
U.S. 946, 83 S.Ct. 939, 9 L.Ed.2d 970 (1963)(Allen charge given only 1 hour and 5 minutes after the jury began its deliberations, and jury deliberated for only 25 minutes after hearing the Allen charge before returning verdict).

To distinguish his case from our binding precedents, appellant makes much of the resignation of the jury foreperson. Appellant contends that this demonstrates that the Allen charge had such a severely coercive impact that we can grant him relief notwithstanding our precedents. The fact that the foreperson resigned does not, however, make this case materially different: every time an Allen charge effectively dynamites a jury, at least one juror changes his mind. The charge is no more coercive because that juror may happen to be the foreperson.

While we think the full court ought to reconsider Bailey and its progeny, we are, for now at least, overcome by precedent. Accordingly, the district court judgment must be AFFIRMED.

APPENDIX

ALLEN CHARGE GIVEN TO THE JURY IN THIS CASE

I'm going to ask you to continue your deliberations in an effort to reach an agreement upon a verdict and dispose of this case.

Now I have a few additional comments at this time that I would like for you to consider as you do so: This is an important case. The trial has been expensive in time, effort, money and emotional strain to both the defense and the prosecution.

Now, if you should fail to agree upon the verdict, the case will be left open and may have to be tried again.

Obviously, another trial would only serve to increase the costs to both sides. And there's no reason to believe that the case can be tried again by either side any better or more exhaustively than it has been tried before you.

Any further jury must be selected in the same manner and from the same source as you were chosen, and there's no reason to believe that the case could ever be submitted to twelve men and women more conscientious, more impartial or more competent to decide it or have that more or clearer evidence could be produced.

Now, if a substantial majority of your number are in favor of a conviction, those of you who disagree should reconsider whether your doubt is a reasonable one, since it appears to make no effective impression upon the minds of the others.

On the other hand, if a majority or even a less number of you are in favor of an acquittal, the rest of you should ask yourselves again and most thoughtfully whether you should accept the weight and sufficiency of the evidence which fails to convince your fellow jurors beyond a reasonable doubt.

Remember at all times, no juror is expected to give up an honest belief he or she may have as to the weight or effect of the evidence. But after full deliberation and consideration of the evidence in the case, it's your duty to agree upon a verdict if you can do so.

You must also remember that if the evidence in the case fails to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant should have your unanimous verdict of not guilty.

You may be leisurely in your deliberations as the occasion may require and should take all the time which you may feel is necessary.

I'm going to ask you to retire once again and continue your deliberations with these additional comments in mind, to be applied of course in conjunction with all of the other instructions I have previously given you.

FOOTNOTES

1. In Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206 (11th Cir. 1981)(en banc), this court adopted as precedent all decisions of the former Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals decided prior to October 1, 1981.

2. We recognize that in United States v. Bueno, 447 F.2d 903 (5th Cir.1971), the former Fifth Circuit mentioned Williamson while reversing a criminal conviction on entrapment grounds. The Bueno court reasoned that the government's conduct essentially amounted to buying heroin from itself, through an intermediary, the defendant, and then charging him with the crime. This greatly exceeds the bounds of reason stated by this court in Williamson v. United States....

Id. at 905 . Bueno was decided solely on entrapment grounds, not due process grounds, and thus does not support Williamson as a due process doctrine. Also, Bueno is distinguishable because the conduct which the court found offensive was the government's furnishing of the drug to the defendant, rather than the government's use of a contingently-motivated informer.

In any event, the Supreme Court specifically disapproved Bueno in United States v. Russell, 411 U.S. 423, 427-8, 93 S.Ct. 1637, 1641, 36 L.Ed.2d 366 (1973), and overruled it sub silentio in Hampton v. United States, 425 U.S. 484, 96 S.Ct. 1646, 48 L.Ed.2d 113 (1976).

3. Due to obvious space limitations, we cannot discuss the facts and rationales of all these decisions. We list a few of the settled limitations on the Williamson doctrine which, in our view, buttress the conclusion that Williamson has been so restricted that nothing may remain of it. Use of a contingently motivated informer is lawful where the government does not preselect the target of the informer's investigation, United States v. Shearer, 794 F.2d 1545, 1549 (11th Cir.1986), or where payment is contingent on a successful investigation in general or successful investigation of a particular crime, rather than the successful prosecution of a particular individual. Owen v. Wainwright, 806 F.2d 1519, 1522 (11th Cir.1986); United States v. Sanchez, 790 F.2d 1561, 1564 (11th Cir.1986); United States v. Valle-Ferrer, 739 F.2d 545, 546-7 (11th Cir.1984). Moreover, payment of an informant's expenses is not an improper contingent arrangement. United States v. Carcaine, 763 F.2d 1328, 1332 (11th Cir.1985). Even where the government pays an informer to convict a particular person, the government's conduct is not improper so long as there is some justification for this arrangement. Hill v. United States, 328 F.2d 988 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 851, 85 S.Ct. 94, 13 L.Ed.2d 54 (1964)(use of contingent arrangement justified where accused had a past record and neighbors had complained to an agent of the accused's activities); Harris v. United States, 400 F.2d 264 (5th Cir.1968) (prior knowledge that defendant is committing the unlawful act justifies use of contingent fee arrangement). For other factors which have justified affirmance of convictions notwithstanding the Williamson doctrine, see Valle-Ferrer, supra, 739 F.2d at 547 (informant's fee and eligibility for reward disclosed to jury); United States v. Beard, 761 F.2d 1477 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 106 S.Ct. 239, 88 L.Ed.2d 240 (1985)(testimony by government agent corroborates the informer's testimony); Heard v. United States, 414 F.2d 884, 886-87 (5th Cir. 1969)(corroboration of the informer's testimony).

4. In Stein v. Reynolds Securities, Inc., 667 F.2d 33, 34 (11th Cir.1982), the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals adopted as precedent all decisions of Unit B of the former Fifth Circuit.

5. The above details concerning the informant's death and the admission of his deposition into evidence at trial do not appear in the published opinions of Williamson I or II. Instead, they may be found in the transcript of Williamson's first trial; that transcript is part of the former Fifth Circuit's records. A court may take judicial notice of its own records and the records of inferior courts. ITT Rayonier, Inc. v. United States, 651 F.2d 343, 345 n.2 (5th Cir. Unit B 1981). The former Fifth Circuit is the predecessor of the Eleventh Circuit; its records are the Eleventh Circuit's records for purposes of such judicial notice.

6. As noted earlier, the parties dispute certain facts, such as whether the plea arrangement was contingent on an investigation of Rey, and whether the government or the informers initially selected Rey as an investigatory target. Because the district court erroneously held that the Williamson question was an entrapment issue for the jury, it rejected the magistrate's recommendation to dismiss, without accepting or rejecting the limited factual findings on this issue by the magistrate, and without making any independent factual findings on this issue. We need not, however, remand for a resolution of the factual dispute, nor determine the scope of review of the magistrate's factual findings. Assuming, arguendo, that the appellant's version of the facts is correct, the government's conduct in this case did not violate his due process rights.

7. Rey presented an entrapment defense to the jury. In light of the guilty verdict, the jury obviously did not believe that Rey was entrapped. On appeal, Rey does not contend that the government's conduct entrapped him.

8. For a copy of the Allen instruction in this case, see the Appendix to this Opinion.

9. The Allen Court summarized as follows the instruction it upheld:

in a large portion of cases absolute certainty could not be expected; that although the verdict must be the verdict of each individual juror, and not a mere acquiescence in the conclusion of his fellows, yet they should examine the question submitted with candor and with a proper regard and deference to the opinions of each other; that it was their duty to decide the case if they could conscientiously do so; that they should listen, with a disposition to be convinced, to each other's arguments; that, if much the larger number were for conviction, a dissenting juror should consider whether his doubt was a reasonable one which made no impression upon the minds of so many men, equally honest, equally intelligent with himself. If, upon the other hand, the majority was for acquittal, the minority ought to ask themselves whether they might not reasonably doubt the correctness of a judgment which was not concurred in by the majority.

ENTERED FOR THE COURT:

/s/ J. L. EDMONDSON
United States Circuit Judge

ABA Special Committee on Minimum Standards for the Administration of Criminal Justice, Standards Relating to Trial By Jury (Approved Draft, 1968)

Standard 15-4.4. Length of deliberations; deadlocked jury

(a) Before the jury retires for deliberation, the court may give an instruction which informs the jury:

(i) that in order to return a verdict, each juror must agree thereto:

(ii) that jurors have a duty to consult with one another and to deliberate with a view to reaching an agreement, if it can be done without violence to individual judgment;

(iii) that each juror must decide the case for himself or herself but only after an impartial consideration of the evidence with the other jurors;

(iv) that in the course of deliberations, a juror should not hesitate to reexamine his or her own views and change an opinion if the juror is convinced it is erroneous; and

(v) that no juror should surrender his or her honest conviction as to the weight or effect of the evidence solely because of the opinion of the other jurors, or for the mere purpose of returning a verdict.

(b) If it appears to the court that the jury has been unable to agree, the court may require the jury to continue their deliberations and may give or repeat an instruction as provided in paragraph (a). The court shall not require or threaten to require the jury to deliberate for an unreasonable length of time or for unreasonable intervals.

(c) The jury may be discharged without having agreed upon a verdict if it appears that there is no reasonable probability of agreement.
